“Four ways you lose control of the answer.”

Have you read what AI says about you?

I showed this at Beyond the Funnel, our Shenzhen event.

At the Shenzhen SEO conference I said, “A lot of brands are hyper focused on the amount of times they're being cited, but very few of them are actually checking what AI says when they're showing up.”

The first of the four is absent.

You're not in the answer at all. The next one happens while you're showing up.

The second is mis-framed. You're there, described wrongly.

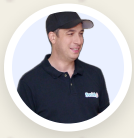

When you look at versus terms, your brand against another brand, a lot of the time AI is citing you on outdated resources and saying things about you that are no longer true.

The third and fourth are about how AI compares you.

Out-ranked

2nd

You're there, second, and it gives a reason.

Judged on someone else's axis

The comparison is drawn on terms you didn't set.

My slide ends on one instruction.

“Determine which one you have before you write anything.”

What we recommend is researching the words AI uses to describe you, then putting out sufficient content on your website and trusted third parties to reinforce that language.

Ask ChatGPT about your brand against your closest competitor and read what comes back.

Then check it against the four.

I'm happy to look at it with you.
